

THE GIRL OF TO-DAY

MISS HELEN McMAHON,
507 West 171st Street, New York

The New York Times asked its readers to submit photographs of the young women whom they considered most typical of the American girl. Entries by hundreds had been received when the contest closed on the evening of November 1st.

Judges in the Contest were seven artists famous for their pictures of American girls: James Montgomery Flagg, C. Allan Gilbert, Clarence F. Underwood, Philip Boileau, Penrhyn Stanlaws, W. L. Jacobs and Hamilton King.

So many attractive photographs were received that the task of limiting the selections to twenty-nine was found too difficult. An additional rotogravure section next Sunday, Dec. 14th, will contain the remaining sixty-one selected by the judges.
